CALL FOR PAPERS AND FOR PARTICIPATION

INTRODUCTION

Modern digital technologies like E-Government, Internet-of-Things, FinTech, “Big Data”, blockchain, cryptocurrencies, etc. are quickly being introduced into our lives. On the one hand, they create convenience, on the other hand, they generate new threats, like cyber attacks, cyber warfare, digital control of people to manipulate consciousness... Can the introduction of digital technologies help to overcome the growth of geopolitical and geo-economic tensions between countries, technological and social inequality of developed and developing countries, pressure on the environment, the expansion of hostilities? Does digital transformation lead to a change in the current mechanism of global governance? What are the digital strategies of different countries and global governance in general? Will colonialism add to the economic and intellectual control full digital control for all individuals and legal entities? Is there any alternative to digital cyber robbery? How to design the future for the growth of the public good with the help of digital technologies? Is economic cybernetics possible as a new doctrine replacing a buy-sell market economy to construct social development in the direction of technical and cultural progress? China, India, Russia... have emerged as keyplayers of digital expansion in the globalised world. Do they bring a message outside profit making? Will they become partners, allies or competitors of Western power in digital affairs? How about other countries of developing world? Do they have any chance to be independent in digital technology? Is catching-up possible? Is there any digital sovereignty? Those are among the issues to be presented and discussed in the session.
